

Did you know your house is located within the Oxford Historic District?

The Oxford Historic Commission has worked diligently since 1989 to form a historic district within the town of Oxford, PA. Their hard work finally paid off in February 2008, and the Oxford Historic District was added to the National Register of Historic Places. Join other members of our community in proudly displaying your property's membership on the National Register. The bronze Oxford Historic District plaque will display the year in which your property was established, if known. The Commission will use the records it has on file to verify the date of property.
